Mount Scott, 2,455 feet high, which has a paved highway to the top.

These pictures are presented to give Oklahoma citizens and their visitors from other states a bird's-eye view of the beautiful scenery which abounds in our state. Lakes, rivers, springs, falls, natural bridges, picnic areas, state parks, canyons, float trips, fine forests, rock gardens, art and historic museums, salt plains, underground caves, game preserves—all of them are easily reached by good highways in Oklahoma. The four scenes surrounding these lines are in four sections of the state but it is only a short drive to visit any one of them. Lake Murray, Lake Spavinaw and the Illinois River are three of the most widely patronized and enjoyed wending spots in the state, and every visitor always goes back again and again.

Oklahoma's history dates back to the year 1541, when Coronado and DeSoto led their explorers across the plains and hills. The Glass Mountains, shown above, have witnessed the years and centuries that have rolled by. All families interested in knowing their Oklahoma should take drives on good roads and visit a number of the historic spots. These include: Fort Gibson, Tuskahoma, Dwight Mission, Antelope Hills, Wheelock Church, Devil's Den, Devil's Canyon, Woola-rox Museum, the ruins of Fort Towson and Fort Arbuckle, the Civil War battleground at Honey Springs, the Indian battlefield near Cheyenne, the end of the "trail of tears" at Eagletown. And be careful to observe the increased industrial activity and the improved farming systems noticeable in every town and at every turn in the road.

An attractive view of the rugged canyon route, a section of State Highway 41 west from the Minco bridge to Binger. Native scenery made accessible by modern roads.
